Buying & selling commercial property

If you buy a freehold property you own it outright, whereas if you buy leasehold property you are a tenant and have a right to occupy, subject to the terms of the lease.

The best option for you can vary depending on your individual situation and preference. Buying a freehold can give you more control over what you do with the property and you can benefit in any rise in value of the property. Buying leasehold can give you more flexibility, with a smaller initial outlay. A freehold purchase can have a higher initial cost but over the longer period can be more effective than renting premises.

It is your responsibility to ensure you survey and inspect any property. This applies not only to the actual property but also the equipment, fixtures and fittings that may be included in the transaction. Certain rights, such as occupation of a footpath across the land, wouldn't show up in title deeds or normal searches.

If instructed we will make sure all the necessary searches are completed and investigated, highlight any potential conflicts and ensure that your legal interests are protected.

Commercial leases

Also known as a business tenancy, a commercial lease is essentially a contract between a landlord and a tenant. It allows a tenant to occupy a property for a certain length of time, subject to certain rights and obligations that are set out in the lease.

The wording of a business tenancy is very important as it will include the terms and conditions of factors such as;

- The rights of landlord and tenant - are you able to use the car parking or rights of way?
- Liability for repairs, maintenance and decoration - do you have a full repairing or limited repairing lease?
- Alterations of the commercial property - what are the pre-conditions?
- Transferring the business tenancy - what are the restrictions on transfer?
- Security of tenure - is the lease excluded from the renewal provisions of the Landlord and Tenan Act 1954?
- The tenant's use of the commercial property
- Rent, interest and rent review - what is the basis of the rent review: market value, RPI or another method?

We can make sure that any business tenancy drawn up suits your business needs, or can advise on the terms of any existing business tenancy you may have.

Commercial leases are drafted in favour of the landlord and therefore as a potential tenant you need to ensure that you obtain the best advice to enable you to minimise your risk.

Construction

There are three main options for structuring a construction project; design and build, the traditional method and management contracting. Whilst there are other options available these three form the majority of contract structure.

Design and build

A contractor takes responsibility for the entire project employing a design team and taking control of the design and construction

Traditional method

The developer employs the design team and a contractor is responsible for construction only

Management contracting

A developer takes on a design team directly and a contractor as a management contractor, with responsibility for managing the project but no direct construction responsibility.

Selecting the best structure for your project is vitally important from the outset. As solicitors with vast experience in construction projects we would be delighted to help decide what is best for you.

Property development

The development of a property for commercial purposes involves various legal issues.

We can assist you with your requirements at each stage of the project, which may include:

- Development vehicle - whether you choose to incorporate a new limited company or enter into a partnership or joint venture agreement, we can assist with the legal documentation.
- Site acquisition - we can assist with the acquisition of the development site and strategic agreements such as option agreements or conditional contracts to enable you to ensure that you only acquire the site once all of your requirements have been fulfilled.
- Planning matters - we can assist with the negotiation and completion of any agreements to enable you to obtain planning permission, such as Section 106 Agreements.
- Plot sales - having dealt with the site since inception, we will be familiar with any issues and this will assist in the onward sale to private buyers of plots.

Dispute Resolution

Unfortunately despite the best laid plans disputes sometimes still occur. If parties cannot resolve their dispute between themselves, there are a number of options for resolving them. These include Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) methods, such as adjudication and arbitration or taking court action. Again, if you find yourself in this unfortunate position, we have experts to help and give advice in this matter.

Environmental and planning issues

Any commercial development is likely to come into contact with planning and environmental law issues.

We can provide advice and support on factors such as environmental liabilities, contaminated land, environmental assessment, waste management, environmental compliance and risk management.

There are many other factors involved with commercial property law, such as landlord and tenant issues and corporate property finance. Our commercial property team would be delighted to help in all or any area of commercial property law.
